

Supplemental Digital Appendix 1

Narrative Developed with the Guidance of 4th-Year Medical Students from Penn State College Of Medicine Through TimeSlips, a Creative Group-Based Storytelling Program Involving Persons with Dementia

“Disgusted Hijinks in High Altitudes”

(Photo courtesy of Molly McInnis)

Wacko!

This picture is a good one to throw away – in the dump area.

And look at the expression on their face!

They don't look happy. They don't look like gentlemen. It's not legal!

They are arguing and fighting. They don't look too happy.

They don't have room to park their cars.

They are very unhappy. They have never been there so long. They are hungry.

They hope to have a good time in Philadelphia.

They see a lot of people and things to do in Philadelphia.

There's a guy in the corner spying on them! He is bad!

They are selling this crap!

The one looks like a girl. Nowadays that's how people wear their stuff.

Could be a guy or a woman. I think they both look like me.

They have a junkie Ford. It could be now, in late spring.

They see the fire in the back. They're not very worried about it.

There's a parked car on fire. I am disgusted.

They smell the fire – lots of pine trees, ewwww they smell themselves!

That's the father and the son, but they don't look like it. They have different features.

They have 8 kids – 1, 2, 3, 4, 5... They are just checking the stuff out.

It's okay to do this stuff. It's alright.